It is the second movie in a trilogy of Doraemon feature films. It is directed by Junya Sato. This movie was released on December 22, 2007. A third and final movie, Doraemon: Nobita's Great Adventure into the Underworld, was released on November 24, 2008. Plot It is the year 1999. The past three years have passed without news of the seventy-seven-year-old Nobita Nobi, who is presumed dead. He has decided to return to Earth. Doraemon accompanies him on his journey. On the way, Doraemon is kidnapped by a mad scientist. Nobita and the other street urchins (Kodama, Kimba, and Kuruma) rescue him from the scientist, who unfortunately turns out to be Tsurara, a former servant of Nobita's uncle who went mad after he discovered Nobita's secret art, and proceeded to use technology to rob the treasure of Jadoo. In the process, the former servant loses his memory and is now carrying a disguise to pass for a police officer. Nobita's dog, Ginga, accompanies them, as do Doraemon, who has prepared a way to return them to the future, and his robot, Barra. In the year 1999, Nobita and the other street urchins arrive in the present. The police, accompanied by Doraemon, arrest Tsurara. Because of the criminal record on his name and the time machine he carries, Tsurara is brought to the evil king Kanazaki. He is confronted by a photo of the king, who reveals that he will punish anyone who messes up Tsurara's plans. A sweet-faced man named Naraku is revealed to be his assistant. Nobita, Kimba, Kodama and Kuruma sneak into the palace, while Doraemon, now in human form, delivers them to the foyer. The four of them then steal the scroll, and enter a tunnel. Meanwhile, Nobita sneaks in and is caught by the guards. Nobita must pay a ransom to the king, with him having his mustache shaved and his crown removed. Naraku is also arrested and brought to the king. He is taken out of the cell and tied up, though the king releases him at Naraku's request to find Tsurara, for which he is given 100,000 gold coins. Naraku asks Nobita to go with him to the dungeon 82157476af
